

The couples that are
Meant To Be
are the ones who go through everything that's designed to tear them apart and come out even Stronger.

I saw this quote online and thought that it spoke volumes to the love Kenneth and Kenya share in Perspectives II.

Set in a neighborhood known for breaking barriers, two financially established individuals meet in Addisleigh Park. This small historic neighborhood in Queens New York that has been home to numerous notable African Americans; such as Jackie Robinson, Lena Horne and W.E.B. Du Bois, to name a few.

Kenneth is a CPA for an established Tax Firm. He's never seen the necessity of settling down. In his opinion women were out to share his love, only if the price tag is right.

Kenya is a smart, accomplished Psychiatrist with her own private practice. After experiencing a string of failed relationships she has given up on love being in her future.

One chance encounter entices the two to flirt with the idea of love's possibility. As their romance unfolds their love is tested with a dilemma that threatens to tear them apart.

Love rarely comes packaged perfectly. More often than not it comes with hurdles to be triumphed. A testament to popular couples like Obama and Michelle, or Will and Jada whose love endures despite their success.

These couples stand together undeterred by the temptations that must surely arise from being wealthy and appearing to have it all.

Journey with Kenneth and Kenya as they taunt the odds and dare to love in defiance of all that threatens to keep them apart.
